THE NUMBERS BEHIND THE POSTER

A Plackett–Luce conditional logit fitted to the 18 headline bookings across the six US flagship editions staged since 2023, plus a logistic persistence model for the undercard. Feature set and regularisation chosen by held-out likelihood, then integrated forward over coefficient uncertainty and per-artist availability, 200,000 paths.

Leave-one-edition-out the headline model names 66.7% of held-out slates, against 22.2% for ranking on popularity alone, 16.7% for rebooking the previous edition and 7.0% for a uniform draw from the pool.

ANYWHERE ON THE BILL

Support-tier acts outrank marquee names here, and that is the model working rather than failing: Rolling Loud recycles its deep bill and rotates its top of it. The fitted undercard coefficient on draw is -4.05.

Read this as a forecast, not a leak. All probabilities are conditional on the edition being staged; multiply by 0.93 for unconditional odds. The model is fitted to eighteen headline bookings, so coefficient uncertainty is wide, and because popularity ranks for pre-2026 editions were assigned retrospectively the backtest above is an optimistic bound on out-of-sample skill rather than an estimate of it.

Acts drawing at stadium scale headline or do not appear. Travis Scott, Drake and Kendrick Lamar are all live candidates for a headline slot — Travis at 18%, Drake at 12% — but none of them takes a second-line support billing, so when they miss the top three they leave the bill entirely rather than sliding down it. Their probability of being on this poster just is their probability of closing a night.

The day splits are the weakest claim on the poster. Full headline day-splits are recoverable for two editions and one undercard fragment, which is not enough to fit anything, so they follow an explicit rule: Saturday takes the biggest draw (true of both editions where the split is known), and each day clusters around its headliner’s lane (visible in Orlando 2026, where NBA YoungBoy’s Sunday carried Sexyy Red, OsamaSon, Che and Skrilla). Treat who is on the bill as the forecast and which day they play as an educated arrangement.

Where I would bet against the model: Don Toliver is too high (it expects 45% of slots to go to a 2026 headliner against a 29% historical base rate), Drake is too high (eleven years of declining this festival is not a feature the model can see), and Sexyy Red is too low (two usable transitions cannot identify an unbroken streak). Lil Durk is the wildcard: acquitted 11 Sep 2026 but held for a racketeering trial from 5 Oct.
